Maison de l'Europe de Paris,
29 avenue de Villiers, 75017 Paris • 17h30 – 19h30

Over the last fifteen years the European Union has been confronted with a succession of crises across different policy areas, ranging from the Eurozone crisis to the Covid pandemic and, more recently, Russia's invasion of Ukraine. Which lessons can we draw from the way the EU has reacted to these various crises? Are crises always a driver of further European integration, as Jean Monnet predicted, or can they – in certain circumstances – lead to a weakening of the Union?

Looking ahead, is the EU governance well equipped to deal with future crises? Have Member states the same vision about the necessity to reform the EU to increase its crisis-management capacity? How to improve the EU's capacity to respond to crises without undermining democracy and parliamentary accountability?
